Nobody likes to leave money on the table, yet an estimated 58,000 people have left an average of $2,600 in old retirement plans.

"Sometimes people don't even realize that they have a benefit," said Spiro Preovolos, Director of Operations at PenChecks, a pension services firm that processes distributions.

Some people left money in profit-sharing plans they may not have known about. Others stayed only a short time at a job and didn't realize they were automatically enrolled in a 401(k) plan. Still others had a retirement plan at a corporation that went bust, while some had moved and couldn't be found.
